CENTRAL INTELLIGENCE AGENCY
MARCH 1975

Preface

This atlas depicts the territorial-administrative organization of the Peoples Republic of China. It supersedes Communist China: Administrative Atlas, published by the Central Intelligence Agency in 1969. The atlas is designed primarily for U. S. Government use. For more detailed information on nonadministrative topics the reader is referred to a companion volume, People's Republic of China: Atlas, published by the Central Intelligence Agency in 1971.

The basic source used in the preparation of the administrative subordination and place name lists is Chung-hua Jen-min Kung-ho-kuo Hsing-cheng Ch'ü-hua Chien-ts'e (Simplified Handbook on Administrative Divisions of the Peoples Republic of China), compiled from data available at the end of 1971 and published in Peking in 1972. New internal administrative boundary delineations have been taken from several recent maps published on the mainland. Maps in the Chung-hua Jen-min Kung-ho-kuo Ti-t'u-chi (Atlas of the Peoples Republic of China), published by the Map Publishing Association of Peking in 1972, have been of particular value, as have the Chung-hua Jen-min Kung-ho-kuo Ti-t'u (Map of the Peoples Republic of China) and Chung-kuo Ti-t'u-ts'e (Atlas of China) both published in Peking in 1973, and Ti-t'u-ts'e Chiao-hsüeh Ts'an-kao (Atlas for Teaching School Reference) published in Shansi Province in 1973.

The linework in this atlas, with minor exceptions, was produced by Automap—a computer-assisted cartographic system developed by the Central Intelligence Agency.

Notes on Use of the Atlas

Place names are romanized according to the modified Wade-Giles system and reflect current mainland usage. Names of places in ethnic minority areas of China are transliterated from the characters used by the Chinese to phoneticize such names. Spellings are in accordance with decisions of the U.S. Board on Geographic Names, except that changes announced by the Fourth National People's Congress (January 1975) have been incorporated but have not been ruled on by the Board. Conventional spellings are shown parenthetically as alternate names. A table of native and conventional administrative unit spellings is shown on page 48, and romanization conversion tables for Wade-Giles/Pinyin are shown on pages 46 and 47. Pinyin is the romanization system developed and adopted by the Peoples Republic of China (PRC) to record Peking Mandarin pronunciation, which is the basis of the national spoken language. The PRC State Council has announced that beginning 1 September 1975 the Pinyin system will be used as the single standard for spelling of all Chinese personal and geographic names.

The Standard Telegraphic Code (abbreviated as STC and also referred to as the "telecode") can be used to identify the Chinese characters for place names. STC numbers are given in the atlas gazetteer, which is arranged alphabetically by romanized names of administrative units and place names. These numbers were taken from the 1966 Peking edition of the telecode, and some of them differ from the numbers in various other telecode books now in use.

Several older editions of translated telecode books do not contain the abbreviated, or short form characters now in common use on the mainland. Some characters have widely used short forms to which the Chinese have assigned new telecode numbers.

A single populated place symbol on a map in this atlas may represent more than one administrative echelon of government at the location designated. The subordination of the various elements of government within each province can be determined by examining the administrative list on each map.

The hsien name is used on the map to identify the hsien seat. The town concerned may, however, have its own name quite distinct from that of the hsien. For example, if the government of Chin-hu Hsien is relocated to a town called Li-ch'eng, that town henceforth officially becomes known as Chin-hu and will be so identified on Chinese maps depicting administrative centers. But the new location of the hsien seat also retains its original name; thus Li-ch'eng becomes an alternate name for the hsien seat. On the maps and on their accompanying lists of hsien and hsien seats in this atlas, such alternate names are shown parenthetically. Where a hsien name consists of a single syllable, the generic "hsien" is added to the name for a seat. Thus the administrative seat of Wu Hsien is shown as Wu-hsien on the map, while on the administrative list accompanying the map it is shown as Wu. Hsien-level boundaries are omitted because of the absence of reliable source material.

English Translation

Literal translations of Chinese province-level names are provided for the reader's interest. They do not necessarily either reflect the original meaning of the province-level names or possess any present significance.

Administrative Changes, 1949-1975

Approved For Release 1999/09/26 : CIA-RDP86T00608R000600090001-7

When the Peoples Republic of China was proclaimed on 1 October 1949, the country consisted of 34 provinces (not including Taiwan), the Inner Mongolian Autonomous Region (IMAR), one territory (Tibet, over which the Chinese had no effective control), and 12 centrally governed municipalities. In the intervening years, major changes in the administrative structure have been effected. These have included experimentation with regional administration, a gradual reduction in the number of provinces and province-level units, establishment of autonomous administrative units in areas inhabited by minority nationality groups, and wide-ranging changes at sub-hsien levels of administration.

Supaprovincial Administrative Units, 1949-1954. The Peking regime undertook in December 1949 to reorganize the administrative structure in accordance with existing military, political, and economic conditions. The country was divided into six ta-hsing-cheng-chü (great administrative region) plus IMAR. These supaprovincial units had jurisdiction initially over 31 provinces, one territory, and 13 regionally administered municipalities. The six regions initially had considerable power and acted as full-scale regional governments in keeping with needs of the time to rebuild the administrative structure and lay the groundwork for the system of centralized rule envisioned by Peking. In November 1952 the regional governments were stripped of most of their power and reduced to supervisory bodies. Two years later the entire regional structure was abolished, a decision at least partially motivated by fear that the regional governments could evolve into "independent kingdoms," thus threatening the regime's hegemony.

Province Level. During the period from 1950 to 1955, the province-level administrative system was simplified as the number of provinces and province-level units was gradually reduced. Provinces abolished were, in most cases, those that had been recently created—primarily provinces established in the Northeast (Manchuria) and Inner Mongolia. In 1950 Peking reduced the Northeast provinces from nine to six, and in 1954 a further reduction was accomplished leaving only the traditional provinces of Heilungkiang, Kirin, and Liaoning. During 1954 and 1955 the provinces of Chahar, Suiyuan, and Jehol were abolished, with most of their territory transferred to IMAR, and Ningxia Province was merged with Kansu. Sikang Province, which had been carved out of the eastern Tibetan borderlands two decades earlier, was reduced in area and renamed the Ch'ang-tu (Chamdo) Special Area. Other province-level changes during this time included the short-lived Pingyuan Province (1951-53) and the restoration of Anhwei, Kiangsu, and Szechwan, which earlier had been subdivided into eight province-level units (two each in Anhwei and Kiangsu and four in Szechwan). Finally, the municipalities under direct central government control were reduced from 14 to 3, leaving only Peking, Shanghai, and Tientsin in this category. By the end of 1955, China had 25 provinces and 3 centrally governed municipalities, a pattern of administration that has remained virtually unchanged to the present.

Autonomous Administrative Units. The presence of numerous minority groups—and particularly the location of many of them in politically sensitive frontier areas—presented Peking with a challenge of how best to establish centralized political control without stimulating separatist tendencies. Consequently, and as one facet of a complex program, the PRC at an early stage organized at all levels of administration self-styled autonomous administrative units in areas inhabited by minority nationalities. By 1953 more than 50 autonomous administrative units at hsien or higher administrative levels had been created.

The national autonomous areas (autonomous regions, autonomous prefectures, autonomous hsien, and autonomous banners) exemplify historic Chinese political philosophy and practice in dealing with ethnic minorities. The granting of autonomy represents merely the recognition of ethnic minority groups, together with the appointment of their local leaders, in a way that assures effective political control. Self-administration rather than self-determination is the basic concept involved.

In the decade 1955-65, four first-order autonomous regions (IMAR had been created in 1947) were established in border areas inhabited by minority nationality groups: in 1955 Sinkiang Province was redesignated as the Sinkiang Uighur Autonomous Region; in 1958 Kwangsi Province became the Kwangsi Chuang Autonomous Region; also in 1958 the Ningxia Hui Autonomous Region was established by incorporating some, but not all, of the area from eastern Kansu that had become part of Kansu in 1954 upon abolition of the old Ningxia Province; and in 1965 the status of Tibet was changed from that of preparatory region to the formal Tibetan Autonomous Region, signifying a consolidation of Chinese control. The five autonomous regions are the highest level of administration in areas with large, though not necessarily predominant, minority populations. Similar units have been established at second- and third-order administrative levels—autonomous prefectures, autonomous banners, and autonomous hsien. All autonomous units, regardless of administrative level, are totally integrated into the regular centralized administrative hierarchy. They have neither more nor less authority than the regular administrative units and differ only in that concessions are made to local minority customs and languages and that minority cadres are integrated into the administrative structure.

Sub-Hsien-Level Changes. Although the hsien remains as the most important administrative unit in rural China, the hsien today does not form the bottom level of the centralized bureaucracy as it did under the old Chinese Empire or in pre-1949 Republic days. Instead, the basic level of state power now descends to the commune, the sub-hsien unit that administratively replaced the hsiang (township or administrative village) in 1958.

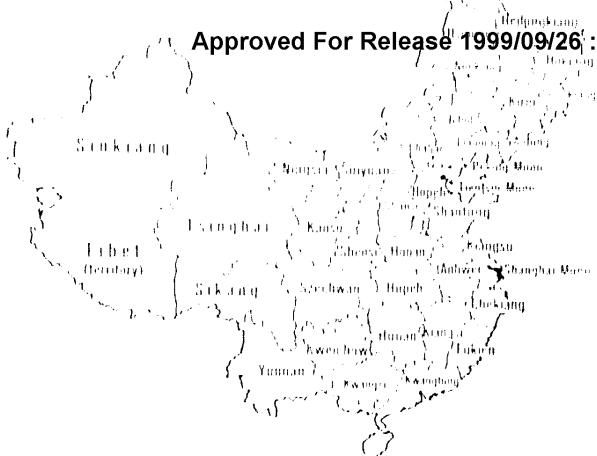

The commune and its sub-units—the production brigade and production team—have undergone a series of changes in size and modification of function, reflecting compromises between ideology and economic and social realities. In 1958 there were 24,000 communes. The number increased abruptly to 74,000 during the period 1959-61. The commune now varies in size depending on population density, topographical conditions, and local transportation. The smallest commune component, the production team, usually comprises about 20 to 40 households. In South China the production team often equates to a village; in North China, where villages tend to be larger, the team is comprised of a village neighborhood, and the entire village often equates to a production brigade.

Other Changes. The PRC has not been reluctant to create, dissolve, or alter administrative units in the past, and it can be expected to continue to demonstrate the same flexibility in the future whenever changes will simplify administration, tighten control, or permit greater regional economic integration. During the past decade four major changes have occurred in the province-level administrative divisions. In 1965 a territorial shift gave the Kwangsi Chuang Autonomous Region frontage on the Gulf of Tonkin. This transfer involved several hsien in the coastal area that traditionally had been part of Kwangtung Province (except for a brief period, 1951-55, when the area was part of Kwangsi). The transfer probably reflected military requirements at the time when U.S. involvement in Vietnam became a major concern. In 1967 Tientsin regained its province-level status, after having been demoted from a centrally controlled municipality to subprovince level in 1958.

In 1969 the Inner Mongolian Autonomous Region was partially dismembered. Extensive areas of IMAR were detached and incorporated into adjoining provinces with which economic and transportation links were stronger than with the main central portion of Inner Mongolia. Again, military needs probably caused the changes to be made since they were made during the period of heightened tension initiated by the 1969 Sino-Soviet border clashes. In the east, most of Hu-lun-peh-erh League was incorporated into Heilungkiang Province; the southernmost part of Hu-lun-peh-erh League and all of Che-li-mu League became part of Kirin Province; and Chao-wu-ta League was transferred to Liaoning Province. In the west, about two-thirds of Pa-yen-nao-erh League was detached from Inner Mongolia, part being assigned to Kansu Province and part subordinated to the Ningxia Hui Autonomous Region.

The most recent province-level administrative change occurred in 1973, when the area under the jurisdiction of Tientsin was expanded. At that time five hsien were transferred from Hopeh Province to Tientsin Municipality.

Administrative Structure

The accompanying table, "Administrative Divisions," gives the number of second- and third-order administrative subdivisions within each of the provinces, autonomous regions, and municipalities directly under Central Government control.

First-Order Divisions. The first-order, or province-level, administrative divisions consist of 21 provinces (sheng), five autonomous regions (tzu-chih-ch'ü), and three municipalities (shih). Each of these 29 governmental units is under the direct control of the Central Government in Peking.

Second-Order Divisions. Directly under province or autonomous region supervision are the tzu-chih-chou (autonomous prefecture), the ti-chü (prefecture), the meng (league), and the shih (municipality).

Two changes in terminology involving the basic administrative division between the province and hsien have occurred in recent years; neither change has been explained officially. In keeping with traditional practice, the PRC in 1949 established a number of chuan-ch'ü (special district) or equivalent level units in each province. The chuan-ch'ü was considered to be a temporary administrative unit and it was excluded from the administrative structure listed in the 1954 State Constitution. However, the usefulness of this intermediate administrative level apparently caused the leadership to sanction it anew, but under a new term, ti-chü (region), in the 1970 draft Constitution. This action, together with the convening of party congresses for the first time at the ti-chü level in 1971, apparently was meant to reflect the change from the temporary connotation of chuan-ch'ü to the permanence implied in ti-chü. The second change in terminology occurred when Peking began translating ti-chü in English as prefecture, rather than region, in the January 1975 State Constitution.

Twenty-nine tzu-chih-chou are found in parts of nine of the province-level divisions where ethnic minority groups have a substantial population. The special term "league" applies to four subprovincial divisions of the Inner Mongolian Autonomous Region and to three Mongol-populated second-order units in Heilungkiang, Kirin, and Liaoning provinces. The 78 shih that are directly under province or autonomous region supervision are those whose size, economic development, or political significance justifies an administrative status equivalent to the ti-chü and other second-order administrative units. Included among these 78 shih are all of the capital cities of the provinces and autonomous regions except Shih-chia-chuang, a city of third-order status that serves as the capital of Hopeh. A unique second-order division in Kwangtung Province is a hsing-cheng-ch'ü (administrative district) that functions as the top governmental organization for all of Hainan Island (Hai-nan Tao). Directly subordinate to this hsing-cheng-ch'ü are a tzu-chih-chou, a shih, and several hsien.

Third-Order Divisions.* The third-order administrative unit is represented basically by the hsien, the tzu-chih-hsien (autonomous hsien), and the shih (municipality). The number of hsien remains remarkably stable, around 2,000, despite frequent administrative changes involving the merger or separation of hsien in response to shifting economic patterns, increasing population, and domestic political adjustments. In national minority areas there are 66 autonomous hsien. The 100 shih (municipalities at the hsien level) are generally—though not invariably—less developed industrially and have a smaller population than municipalities at the second-order level. One of these 100 municipalities is Shih-chia-chuang, capital of Hopeh. Unlike all other province and autonomous region capitals, it still does not have second-order administrative status. In 1968 it replaced Tientsin as Hopeh's capital; yet, it remains a third-order shih under jurisdiction of a ti-chü. In Inner Mongolia and adjacent Mongol-populated portions of Heilungkiang, Kirin, Liaoning, Ningsia, and Kansu the traditional administrative term "banner" (ch'i) is applied to the third-order division. The term "autonomous banner" (tzu-chih-ch'i) is applied to three third-order units in Heilungkiang Province inhabited by three of China's smallest ethnic groups, the Evenki (O-wen-k'o), the Oronchon (O-lun-ch'un) and the Daghor (Ta-wo-erh). Also, the chen (town) of Wan-t'ing, in Yunnan Province on the Burma border, enjoys the unique status of being a third-order administrative center, equivalent to a hsien. The reason for Wan-t'ing's designation as a chen is unknown; perhaps the designation is related to Wan-t'ing's administrative power derived from monitoring and controlling traffic on the Burma Road.

Lower-Order Divisions. Third-order divisions are further broken down into rural and urban administrative units; no data exist, however, to depict these in this atlas. The commune is the basic rural unit below the hsien level, but in practice the production brigade and the production team, both subordinate to the commune, are more directly concerned with providing political and economic guidance to the rural populace. The urban administrative unit below the hsien is the chen (town), which owes its urban status mainly to the presence of a central farm market.

* Some authorities consider the hsien and equivalent units as second-order administrative divisions; the ti-chü and equivalent units are classified as subprovince-level administrative units between the hsien and province, a practice followed in the 1969 Communist China: Administrative Atlas. As noted, the permanence of the ti-chü as an administrative level of government forms the basis for the revised hierarchy used here.

The map displays the administrative divisions of Shensi Province, China, during the late 1940s. The province is divided into several sub-province levels (T-chih, T'i-ch'u) and numerous hsien (counties). Major cities like YIN-CHUAN, HSI-AN, and YÜ-LIN are marked. The map also shows parts of Inner Mongolia and surrounding provinces like Ningxia, Gansu, and Hubei. The Chang Chiang (Yangtze) River and its tributaries are prominently featured. An inset map in the bottom right corner shows the location of Shensi within China.

Transliterations of ethnic or minority group names immediately precede the administrative designator. Example: Lien-nan-yao-tsu Tzu-chih-hsien. The initial syllables reflect the specific name of the administrative unit, Lien-nan; the next syllable gives the name of the group, yao, together with the generic tsu, literally meaning ethnic group or clan. Lengthier references result when two or more ethnic groups are involved. Example: Lien-shan-chuang-tsu-yao-tsu Tzu-chih-hsien. In this example the names of the two ethnic groups (tsu), i.e. the chuang and the yao.
